Character Background

As the oldest and, uhm, least dumb of the clan, the other Kobolds look up to you. Your teeth may not be as sharp as they once were but your advice is frequently sought. The loss of your clan leader has created a vacuum in a clan leadership. So, you plan to step up and organize a contest of incredible feats according to Kobold tradition. The feat you ask each contestant to do may test their strength, intelligence or bravery. After the feats are finished, all living clan members vote for their new leader by a show of paws.

Goals

You are in charge of organizing the contest of incredible feats between Belzak[#14] and Fekel[#15].

- Organize the contest of incredible feats
- Appoint the new clan leader
- Escape the plane alive

Enemies

Belzak[#14] is shifty and may try to cheat. Hopefully, he will try to bribe you with some tasty dishes.

Fekel[#15] may possess an artifact that once belongs to his father. This might give him an advantage.

Allies

You do not really recall from where Bluetooth[#12] and Brobag[#13] come. Are those even Kobold names?

Items

Grey Mustard
Cane

Special Abilities

Cup Runneth Over: You can summon water by cupping your hands. As long as your hands are cupped, water will continue to flow. The water will overflow your hands and can be collected in pitchers or other containers. This costs one card.

Restor's Spell of Somnolence: You may select a Kobold with line of sight. If that Kobold fails their draw, they “fall asleep” for five minutes. The player must lie down with their hand folded under their head. They may wake up if they are bitten, kicked, poked, pushed, prodded, probed, smothered in a secret sauce, etc. This costs two cards.

Old Kobold Mind Trick: You may select a Kobold with five steps of yourself. If the target fails their draw, you may give them a command. A command must be a simple statement (that is obviously not self-destructive). Your target can sacrifice a card to ignore your command. This costs one card.
